Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: . consequence free trade upon the part of all the world, including the United States, with Cuba. This, however, was not the case, as experience has amply demonstrated. Cheaper wages, cheaper operating expenses, lower investments for a given carrying capacity as represented by the cost of hulls and machinery, combined with government assistance, have enabled European shippers to secure lower rates for merchandise from foreign ports than from those of the United States to Cuba. This advantage alone has often been sufficient to offset the same or lower invoice prices for the same merchandises exported to Cuba from the United States. And this alone is sufficient to account for the fact that a considerable part of the carrying export trade of Cuba and a very large part of her carrying import trade is under flags other than that of the United States. It is a well-known...
